

Ed Raponi

Regional Finance Manager - Americas
Shell Downstream Commercial Finance

Ed Raponi joined the Royal Dutch / Shell Group in 1988. He has had assignments in trading, transportation, internal audit, corporate planning consulting, commercial management and renewables. Highlights of his service include serving as finance lead in Shell's purchase of Texaco's US refining & marketing business, leading the acquisition and integration of Fletcher Challenge Energy in New Zealand, and serving as vice president of finance for Shell WindEnergy as they acquired, built and developed wind farms in the United States, Europe and Asia.

Raponi currently serves as the regional finance manager of Shell marine products, which sells marine fuels & lubricants to vessels traveling or contracting out of North and South America.

Raponi earned a B.S. degree in finance from Arizona State University. In 2008-09 he completed the Shell Group leadership program at Wharton University. Prior to that he participated in Shell's management development program at Columbia Business School and completed postgraduate studies at Rice University.

Raponi has served as a judge and case study facilitator for NetImpact, participated in Shell's on-campus recruiting for 15 years and been active in the United Way as a fundraiser and business leader.